Effects of long-term roflumilast treatment on bronchial hyperresponsiveness, inflammation, and eosinophils in mild chronic asthma. The purpose of this study was to evaluate the effects of long-term treatment with roflumilast on bronchial hyperresponsiveness (BHR) to methacholine, inflammation, and eosinophilic infiltration in patients with mild asthma. The subjects of this study were 11 patients with mild asthma who had no other allergic diseases and were treated with long-term roflumilast (4 mg per day) for at least 12 months. Methacholine inhalation tests and blood tests for total IgE and peripheral blood eosinophils were performed before and after treatment. At the end of the treatment, the provocation dose producing a 20% fall in the forced expiratory volume in 1 s (PD₂₀ FEV₁) was reduced by 1.1 +/- 0.3 doubling dose compared with the baseline, while the geometric mean provocative concentration of methacholine producing a 20% fall in FEV₁ (PC₂₀ methacholine) was increased from 2.7 mg/mL to 12.5 mg/mL. In the 11 patients, the percentages of eosinophils in induced sputum (EOS% in sputum) and bronchial biopsies (EOS% in biopsies) were significantly reduced after treatment. The percentage of BHR in blood [EOS%] was significantly reduced at the end of treatment. The change in PC₂₀ methacholine positively correlated with the reduction in EOS% in induced sputum and bronchial biopsies and with the change in EOS% in blood. The change in PD20 FEV1 negatively correlated with the reduction in EOS% in induced sputum and bronchial biopsies. In conclusion, long-term roflumilast treatment reduces BHR, airway inflammation, and eosinophilic infiltration in patients with mild asthma, suggesting that this agent may be a therapeutic option for such patients.
